We financed a floor scraper with Direct Capital Corp in February of this year. The amount was for $26,900.00. We have just found out from trying to finance another piece of equipment with another company that Direct Capital had put a blanket lien of all equipment and any obtained hereafter through a UCC filing.

When I called Direct Capital about this matter, they said I could obtain a copy of this information we agreed to for $25.00. I went through all my paperwork again and found this in our master lease agreement. Obviously this agreement was not read all the way in its entirety – due to the length of the agreement.

I called Direct Capital again after finding this information and asked for a payoff of this note so I could refinance it with another lender and was told they would give me the amount within 24 hours for $10.00, which I did not receive in 24 hours, I had to call again and was given an amount right then over the phone.

I just want for others to be aware of their business practices before they choose a lender for their financing. I find this type of business procedure appalling. How a company can justify putting a lien on equipment that they have no interest in is beyond me as well as charging a customer for a payoff amount.

Sincerely,
